The decision to have Mr. Gromyko meet as well with Walter F. Mondale, the Democratic contender, is viewed by the diplomats as an attempt to prevent the impression of taking sides in the election, even though it is generally acknowledged that it is Mr. Reagan who is likely to benefit more.

Throughout the U.S. military buildup, the president insisted that the Soviet Union would ultimately have to resume a dialogue. And, after reviling President Reagan for months as a sworn foe who could

So the Construction Ministry, after 10 years of studying the problem, intends to patch up Figi by building a barrier in the hope that it will arrest the cascade that tears away about 300,000 tons (270,000 metric tons) of mountainside a year. Starting late this month, the ministry will put up a concrete wall at a point 7,200 feet high, where deterioration is especially severe along the winding bed of the Osawa River.

The wall is supposed to be 10 feet thick, 16 feet tall, and 55 feet long. This cement Band-Aid should be invisible from a distance. Nevertheless, the ministry says it believes it will be whether the Americans were actu- enough to stop the slides, or at least slow them.

Concern for Fujinomiya's welfare aside, it would be impossible for the government to sit by idly as Fuji deteriorates. It is hardly just another mountain. Long ago, most Japanese considered it a sacred place.

There still are about 200 groups that continue to worship Fuji as part of a religious discipline with Buddhist and Shinto elements. Even for the majority who do not think of the mountain as sacred, it remains a beckoning siren that reminds them that they are Japanese.

This summer, a man whose legs were paralyzed pushed himself to the top on his arms. Last year, a 98-year-old man made the ascent. A group of 16 blind people also did it, as did a man in a wheelchair. On clear days, Fuji can be seen from Tokyo, 60 miles northeast, and beyond. Unfortunately, much of the year it is not so much a mountain as an allegation, obscured by clouds and industrial baze. No matter, people find it as irresistible as did Basho, a 17th-century poet who wrote: Rain obscures the scene;

But Fuji still exerts a charm

"If we do nothing, the part of the mountain below the wall we are building would deteriorate further," said a project supervisor. Noboru Miyamoto.

A test wall was built in 1982 not far from the new construction site, and it seemed to work. So did concrete

In the last official climbing season in July and August, 1.1 million people made it to the halfway point, which can be reached by road, and 160,000 others went on foot to the too -a rate of more than 100 every hour of the day. Many wait until nighttime to begin, so they can watch the rising sun near the summit

For all its appeal, the mountain is dangerous. In 1980, 12 people were crushed to death when boulders up to six feet in diameter suddenly came sliding down a popular trail. The local prefectural government is talking now about building protective concrete shelters along the route.

Air turbulence around Fuji is a constant hazard for planes whose pilots sometimes get too close trying to give passen-gers a good view. That is what was assumed to have happened in 1966 to a British airliner that broke up as it approached the mountain, killing all 124 people aboard.

It will not be an easy task to shore up the mountain, according to Mr. Miyamoto. The project is expected to take five years because weather is too severe except in summer. Slides will probably hinder workers, who were briefly forced in 1982 to abandon the test-wall size when boulders fell.

Moreover, the only land access is along a narrow, winding mountain path favored by visitors. It cannot possibly accommodate construction material, so all supplies will have to be

The government and private relief organizations said they could not estimate or project the death toll reliably. But they acknowledged that it could eventually reach 200,000, the number that died in the famine of 1974.

Emperor Haile Selassie sought to hide that famine and in doing so contributed to his overthrow. By contrast, the government of Lieutenant Colonel Mengistu Haile Mariam, which lavishly celebrated the 10th anniversary of its revolution last week, has appealed for international aid and set up an agency whose purpose is in combat famine throughout

But despite the government's accomplishments, most pri-vate relief agencies and diplomats asserted in interviews in the past two weeks that Ethiopia had failed to place a sufficiently high priority on feeding its bungry people.

In addition, several international economists argued that Ethiopia's commitment to the expansion of state farms and other socialist policies was kindering the development of the

The relief experts interviewed agreed that whatever its cause, the death toll related to the famine probably would be even higher next year than this year because the harvest this Tens of thousands of Ethiopians are probably dying of fall was likely to be 20 percent to 30 percent below last

In March, May and August, Ethiopia's Relief and Rehabilitation Commission warned that a death toll of "truly catastrophic proportions" was likely unless grain and help in transporting it to remote regions were forthcoming.

The government warned in March, as it has for several years, that five million people were at risk because Ethiopia could produce only 6.2 million tons of grain a year, one million less than it needs.

But the food crisis has dramatically worsened over the summer, experts here agreed.

in a report to relief groups in August, the Relief and Rehabilitation Commission said the population at risk had risen to six million people because the normal light rains had not come this spring and because infestations of worms and other pests had ravaged crops in the southern province of Sidamo, Ethiopia's traditional breadbasket and the source of grain for the usually hard-hit northern provinces of Welo. Tigre and Eritrea.

Relief workers said that in recent weeks they had seen bundreds of people begging for food along the main road near the town of Dese, along other northern roads and even along roads south of Addis Ababa.

EC Stalled WORLD BRIEFS Senators Decry U.S. Philippine Policy

WASHINGTON (WP) — Two senators put the Reagan administra tion on notice Tuesday that political and economic unrest in the Philippines was causing concern on Capitol Hill and might make Congress balk at continuing large-scale aid to the government of President Ferdinand F Marcos.

At a hearing of the Senate subcommittee on East Asian and Pacific affairs, the senators, one Republican and one Democratic, took turns at telling U.S. officials that the administration's policy of quiet diplomacy did not seem to have had much effect on ending the political repression, economic paralysis and corruption fueling a growing Communist insurrection in the Philippines.

The bluntest words came from Senator John H. Glenn Jr., Democrat of Ohio, who said, "We are not going to throw money down a rat hole if we keep seeing abuses and abuses."

The subcommittee chairman, Senator Frank H. Murkowski, Republican of Alaska, was gentler in his comments. But in asserting that U.S. policy had been ineffective he said, "We have leverage but we evidently have chosen not to use that leverage."

U.S. Raises Rights Issue at Arms Talks

STOCKHOLM (UPI) — The United States warned Tuesday that the Soviet Union's buman rights record, including the plight of Andrei D. Sakharov, would be considered in reviewing the results of the European security and disarmament talks.

The chief U.S. delegate, James Goodby, told a closed plenary session the 35-nation talks that the internal exile of the Soviet physicist and his wife, Yelena Bonner, would "affect the integrity and prospects for continued progress" in the talks. Mr. Goodby said that, although human rights was not on the agenda of the disarmament talks, the Soviet record was "so strikingly serious that it needs to be considered even here."

The chief Soviet delegate, Oleg Grinevsky, called Mr. Goodby's speech an "anti-Soviet provocation" and told the session that it could "only be regarded as an attempt to poison the atmosphere."

WASHINGTON — The Defense Department has disclosed documents showing that three U.S. Air Force planes were transferred through the Central Intelligence Agency to U.S.-backed rebels in Nicaragna, according to a spokes-man for Senator Jim Sasser, Democrat of Tennessee.

According to a spokesman for Senator Sasser, the documents delivered Monday to the senator's office at his request are consistent weekend, that detail an elaborate and circuitous transfer late last year of three air force planes from a U.S. Air National Guard airport in Newburgh, New York, to Central America. Senator Sasser, long a critic of the Reagan administration's sup-port for the rebels, said Monday that the transfer may circumvent a strict $24-million limit placed by Congress this year on CIA and Defense Department aid for the rebels, who are known as contras. The key unresolved issue is whether or not these aircraft were transferred to the contras without charge," Senator Sasser said. "This situation leads me to believe that the administration may have acted in a cavalier and irresponsible man-

The three planes - rocketequipped, twin-engine Cessna O-2As — were used in a raid Sept. 1 on a Nicaraguan military school at Santa Clara. Two American civil-ians who had gone to Central America to assist the rebel forces were killed in the raid when the helicopter in which they were riding was shot down.

Congress repeatedly has refused additional funding for the contras this year.

The State Department reiterated its warning Monday that the Unit-ed States would consider the Nicaraguan government's acquisition of advanced combat aircraft "a serious development which would alter the balance of power" in Central America. The Associated Press re-

Congressmen With Central Americans Set Terms on Legalizing Aliens' Status

By Robert Pear New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - House and Senate negotiators drafting a comprehensive immigration bill have agreed to offer legal status to illegal sliens who entered the United States before Jan. 1, 1981, and have lived in the country continuously since then.

The agreement Monday spbi the difference between the House and Senate on one of the most sensitive questions in the bill. The House's version of the bill had set the date at Jan. 1, 1982. The Senate had

Senator Alan K. Simpson, a Republican of Wyoming, chief sponsor of the Senate bill, said the "legalization is an extraordinary act of grace, imprecedented in our law." The agreement occurred on the third day, of negotiations on the immigration bill. The key elements of the bill, including the legalization program and penalties against employers who knowingly hire ille-gal aliens, are now in place, but the bill cannot become law unless it is approved in the same form by both houses of Congress and signed by the president.

Immigration officials estimated that two million to three million illegal aliens might be eligible for the program approved by the con-ferees Monday. But estimates of the illegal alien population are con-sidered unreliable.

Dutch Continue Austerity Policy, Criticize Russians THE HAGUE (AP) - The con-

ter-right coalidon government of Prime Minister Rund Lubbers presented an austerity budget Tuesday for the third year in a row and expressed disappointment at the Soviet deployment of mediumrange missiles in Europe.

Last June the Dutch delayed a decision on the deployment of 48 NATO cruise missiles until November 1985, with actual installation postponed from late 1986 to 1988. It offered to cancel deployment if the Soviet Union froze its deployment immediately. On Tuesday the government expressed disappointment that the Russians reportedly bave continued to increase the number of SS-20 missiles in Czechoslovakia and East Germany.

The annual policy statement was delivered by Queen Beatrix, speaking for the government, in her speech from the throne opening the new parliamentary year.

The Lubbers government introduced an austerity budget when it took office in November 1983 and again a year ago. Finance Minister Herman Ruding called the new budget a turning point in the government's fiscal austerity battle.

Mr. Mulroney, 45, a Montreal attorney, appointed 13 members of Parliament from the western provio, 11 from French-speaking Que-bec and 5 from the Maritimes. The cabinet was sworn in Monday.

The last cabinet of the defeated Liberal Party contained only one member from the West and was weighted heavily toward Quebec.

Mr. Mulroney's appointments set at least three national records: the cabinet is the largest in history; it has the most women, six; and it comes to the United States later this month. It advertises the Soviet government's readiness to deal with the United States and, the Kremlin may further calculate, it puts a thumb's worth of extra pressure on President Reagan to make his session with Mr. Gromyko the next day more than "just another meeting," in the belittling words of a Soviet spokesman. The Russians well know that the dynamics of the campaign ensure that the closest attention will be paid to the ways in which the two candidates go into and come out of their talks with the veteran Soviet diplomat.

Mr. Reagan started this particular sequence. Only once in his presidency has he talked with a Russian (Ambassador Anatoli Dobrynm), and he was under sharp attack for the break in good sense and Soviet-American custom in failing to talk more. Through August he pur-sued and eventually landed Andrei Gromyko. The Russians then made Mr. Mondale an offer which, for considerations of policy and politics alike, he could not refuse.

In getting ready, Mr. Reagan and Mr. Mondale have opposite problems. To wondering citizens the president has to show that he is in fact a reasonable peace-seeking man; to the Russians be has to show that, in a second term, they will find him a serious negotiating part-

It was clever of Andrei Gromyko to add ner. There is a bit of tension between these Walter Mondale to his calendar when be requirements, but nothing a skilled politician requirements, but nothing a skilled politician cannot handle. Actually, the real tension is currently being generated inside the Reagan administration as officials come to see the Gromyko visit as the moment of tone-setting for the foreign policy of a second Reagan term. The hard-liners want the president to stick to getting acquainted; more moderate officials hope to commit him to a line of negotiation. It is getting interesting.

Mr. Mondale has a less complicated task.

He has simply to show the voters and the Russians that he will not give away the store.

This he set out to do in his Sunday radio talk, portraying himself as a "tough" bargainer from whom "the Soviet Union has nothing to gain from delay." There was a needle, too. The Russians, he said, "share responsibility"—a formulation implicitly putting the onus first on Mr. Reagan — for the "dangerous stalemate" in arms control. "Millions" of Americans, be said, want "concrete results" from the Reagan-Gromyko meeting: agreement on a summit, resumption of U.S.-Soviet arms control talks and progress on buman rights.

It is a tall order. The irony is that, to the extent to which Mr. Mondale may spur Mr. Reagan to deliver on some modest part of it, the president, not the challenger, may profit. -THE WASHINGTON POST.

A Reagan Pseudo-Issue

President Reagan asserts at every opportu-nity that a line-item veto would enable him to conquer the runaway spenders on Capitol Hill.
It sounds reasonable, bul it's a fake.

Every president has chafed at the practical impossibility of rejecting individual programs in otherwise acceptable appropriations bills. To get at one such item requires vetoing an agency's whole budget. Presidents since Ulysses S. Grant have asked for the line-item veto, to let them pick and choose. Every Congress, including the present one, has refused. Mr. Reagan now seems to prefer gaining the authority through a constitutional amendment — along with the balanced-budget amendment, which has more steam behind it.

The main thing wrong with Mr. Reagan's pitch is that a line-item veto would not be relevant to the overwhelming majority of government outlays. Interest on the national debt cannot be item-vetoed. Nor can entitlement programs, because they have no lines to veto. As for military spending, Mr. Reagan has proposed more budget lines than Congress has passed. There are also hundreds of billions more in tax benefits that are expenditures in all but name and contribute to deficits just as much as direct outlays. They would not be affected at all by a line-item veto. That leaves less than 15 percent of the budget, not much of which can be touched if the government is to function — funds for things like weather forecasting, federal highways and the census.

So much for the urgency of the matter.

A further argument turns on the balance of executive and legislative powers. Mr. Reagan says Congress has proved incapable of control-ling the budget, so be needs this tool to do it himself. He had line-item power as governor of California and, as he tells it, saved the state from all manner of profligacy. Defenders of Congress's turf respond that a federal shift of power would shake the foundations of the Constitution. Both sides exaggerate. It is wrong to blame Congress for most budget deficits; most Congresses pass largely what a president requests. But the log-rollers who stuff appropriation bills with each other's pet projects are also wrong to contend that a line-item veto would wreck the Republic.

The governors of 43 states have such a line veto, for the historical reason that governors are more the boss than is the president - but the boss of much less. State fiscal policies, in any case, have nothing like the federal govern-ment's responsibility for the total economy.

But there is no point worrying about an issue about which Mr. Reagan cares only casually. He asked for a line-item veto in last January's State of the Union Message but never even submitted a specific proposal. Even now the administration has no precise formula in mind. The line-item veto is a campaign slogan to divert attention from the horrendous deficits piled up in the Reagan years.

Other Opinion

The governments of all the creditor countries must collectively decide that they will insure the loans from the private banking market to debtor countries, on a scale large enough to eliminate the need for them to service their debt either by premature exports or by the charade of refinancing past loans
... To think that all that is needed is a brief period of austerity before poor countries can go back to paying compound interest on shortterm bank loans is a pipe dream. - Lord Lever, head of n Commonwealth

Andreotti on the Germanys

I don't understand all this fuss about my statements. With all the international problems we have at present, I don't think another one should be added — such as unification of the two Germanys and revision of the borders in Europe. If someone thinks the opposite, be can say so. As to what I said in Rome, I have said it many times at international meetings and have never heard objections. The last time was at an EC foreign ministers' meeting in the presence of [West] German Foreign Minister [Hans-Dietrieb] Genscher, who did not object.

I don't know whether certain things should be said or not, but I really feel one cannot think today of revising borders. Besides, a country like ours, which has relations with both states, must respect both states as such. - Italian Foreign Minister Giulio Andreotti, interviewed in Corriere della Sera (Milan).

Mr. Andreotti's remarks are a slap in the face of a friendly people. — Annemarie Renger, Bundestag Vice-President (SPD), quoted in Die Welt (Bonn).

Lever on the World Debt Crisis All in all, Mr. Andreotti has become an embarrassment for the [Italian] government and for the Christian Democrats. That is at Italian concern. However, the [West] German government can take note that - astonishing-- Mr. Andreotti's false step has elicited Italian solidarity with the "ideal goals" of German policy more strongly than one would have expected before. - Alfons Dalma, writing in Die Welt (Bonn).

> Mr. Andreotti has ruffled feathers. "We all agree there should be good relations between the two Germanys," he was quoted as saying, "but pan-Germanism is something which should be suppressed. There are two German states and that is the way it should remain."

> Now this is a point of view. We have had more than enough experience of "pan-Germanism" and the outbreaks of aggressive nationalism which so often accompany it. Since Bismarck united that country, she has three times turned on her neighbors in treacherous and sadistic wars. The West, many believe, pays lip service to the idea of German unity. but lip service only. This is perhaps the only issue on which the West and the Soviet Union tacitly agree - that, judging by the past, reuniting the two Germanys would be a hideously dangerous experiment. Germans, understandably, argue today that the Nazi period was an aberration of German behavior. [Chancellor] Kohl is undoubtedly shocked that the foreign minister of an ally and partner should have said what he did, and not just because it is marvelous propaganda for the Kremlin, which of late has been banging on about West German "revanchism."

The air is full of talk of "misunderstandings" and "satisfactory explanations," but this row is going to rumble on for some time. - The Daily Telegraph (London).

WORCESTER, Massachusetts — Respected Roman Catholic theologians in the United States have been increasingly worried about the Vatican's opposition to progressive thought. The concern was confirmed on Sept. 3 when the Sacred Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith issued a warning against "certain forms of the theology of liberation." The warning makes the accus-tomed avowals that it is directed only against excesses and irresponsible forms of liberation theology, and that its criticisms do not directly touch mainstream liberation theologians. But the "instruction" comes at a time when professionally recognized theo-logians, most notably Brazil's Gusta-vo Gutierrez and Leonardo Boff, are objects of Vatican scrutiny, Inevitably, the public perception will be that why does Catholic officialdom devote so much attention and energy to hounding some of the most dedicated and loyal members of the church? In the 1950s, Vatican conservatives tar-geted as dangerous and unreliable men such as Henri de Lubac, recently made a cardinal in his old age; Kar Rahner, today revered as one of the century's great theological minds; Yves Congar, whose unsurpassed historical grasp of Christian tradition was one of the basic resources of Vatican II; John Courtney Murray, the architect of Vancan II's decree on religious freedom. Now the attack is directed against Latin American theologians working to create a theology designed to guide Christians committed to justice and equality.

Perhaps liberation theologians, even if well intentioned, are flirting with the devil by their use of Marxist social analysis. Does this not aid a sellout of Christianity to commu nism? What actually are the so-called liberation theologians saying?

First of all, they do draw selectively from Marx's thought, which seems to make some sense in a cultural context where Marxist categories are the common tools for social analysis. But as Arthur, McGovern points out in his scholarly "Marxism, an Ameri-can Catholie Perspective," these elements of Marxism are incorporated into and transformed by a view of society that is inspired by the Gospels and Christian traditions.

But why make so much of class

Gracht (Princes' Canal).

This is a wild and exaggerated argument. The liberation theologian fails to observe that it is culture that seems to determine success in the development game. The Counter-Reformation church of Spain and Portugal created mores that allowed fberia and South America to remain submerged in a feudalistic state until relatively recent times. This is Latin America's prime economic problem, from which all else has flowed.

For three centuries the Roman Catholic Church was bostile to commerce and industry. The Counter-Reformation state restricted private enterprise. It licensed state monopolies and favored mercantilism.

As late as 1850 the difference between the per capita income of Latin America and North America was not great. The populations were similar and both continents were mainly ag-

The Protestant ethic, with its emphasis on saving, thrift, investment, regularity, diligence and individual effort pushed North America to its present state of economic advance. But the Counter-Reformation ethic kept Latin America poor, a continent of soldiers, aristocrats and priests, but not one of development.

ft is understandable why Latin American theologians and activists find it difficult not to draw the conclusions they do. They have grown up in an atmosphere where wealth is relatively static. But historically there is little evidence to suggest that what happened inside Latin America was ficated in its external relations.

Joseph Ramos, an economics pro-fessor at a Catholic institute in Santiago, has written a critical analysis of "liberation economics." He cites four facts that appear to disprove the argument that the Latin American underdevelopment is a consequence of exploitation by the United States:

 Only 5 percent of total U.S. in-. vestment is made abroad, and a frac-tion of that goes to South America, U.S. investment in Latin America is less than I percent of U.S. GNP.

Only about 200 U.S. companies account for most U.S. investment overseas, and most of that is in the industrialized world. • The average rate of return on U.S. investments in Latin America is no higher than in Europe.

Mr. Ramos believes that Latin America only started to progress af-ter World War II, when it began to absorb the lessons of the industrial revolution. Since 1945 it has begun to modernize. Before the world recession of the 1980s, it had a postwar growth rate averaging 5.2 percent a year. Infant mortality fell from 83 per 1,000 births to 46. Life expectancy ncreased from 42 to 62 years.

Mr. Ramos is not trying to argue that the problems of massive poverty m the shantytowns or the rural backwaters do not exist, only that the continent has begun to move now that it has begun to throw off its old cultural and religious norms. The church activists are one reflection of the end of the Counter-Reformation culture. Unfortunately, they do not perceive the other elements of change in their society. They see only the problems, not the progress. Latin America is no longer static. The creation of wealth that can be multiplied and widely distributed given the right mix of government policies, is well under way. The task of development, for those who concern themselves with ending poverty, must be to channel this newfound economic energy wisely and to make sure that part of the growing wealth is used to repair the damage of centuries of neglect and to provide a safety net for those who suffer from the inevitable disruptions caused by economic growth and change. The more sober minds in the lively Latin American church realize this. The liberation theologians have their heads buried in old ideas no longer relevant.

The Debts Can Bring A Disaster

Service of the servic

By Colin Legum

TONDON - A warning that the world's financial safety is balanced on a knife-edge is given by a group of distinguished Common. wealth financial experts headed hy Lord Lever, a former financial secre-tary at the British Treasury.

The ten members of the study group, which was set up by the Commonwealth summit meeting held in New Delhi last November, are drawn from both the developed and the developing nations — Nigeria, Jamaica, Zambia, Sri Lanka, Malaysia, India, Canada, Tanzania and Guyana, in addition to Britain. Their report Economy") is to be considered by Commonwealth finance ministers at a meeting starting in Toronto today.

The report emphasizes a danger of worldwide disruption if interest payments due on the debts of the major theveloping countries are not paid. That risk, it points out, is not only to the developing countries that may default but equally in the leading international banks and thus to the world financial system itself.

The financial strength of the debtnr countries and the bankers is now firmly interlocked, and the minimum required for safety is to ensure that the debtors are put in a position where they are able to pay their interest in the immediate years ahead. Leading banks have committed sums amounting to twice their capital and reserves. If interest is not paid and much of the debt has to be written off as nonperforming, the result could be "insolvency of countries and banks, the dislocation of local economies and political systems and the dislocation of world trade."

This risk is great, the report argues, because it is "neither feasible nor desirable" for the debtor countries in desirable." for the debtor countries in aggregate to generate the large and sustained trading surpluses required of them at their present stage of development if they are to keep up interest payments on their foreign debts. The reason given for this glonmy judgment is that "erosion in the living standards in developing countries has pushed their peoples to countries has pushed their peoples to the margin of tolerance."

The urgent need is to organize an adequate, collective response. The in-ternational community, the report says, "must again find the balance between public purpose and private finance which was at the beart of the Bretton Woods arrangements, and which is indispensable to the sustained growth and stability of an interdependent world."

The total debt of developing countries at the end of 1983, about $800 billion, was far more than their com-bined export earnings. Half of the long-term debts are owed to private markets, compared to a quarter just a decade ago. The annual debt-service payment of the non-oil-producing developing countries reached $60 billion by 1982-83, absorbing 13 percent From 1980 to last year their export earnings only just kept pace with the increase in their interest payments.

Developing countries had a negative net inflow of funds last year amounting to $11 billion. A decline of official development aid and the rise in debt-service obligations coincided with a collapse of primarycommodities prices and with one of the worst droughts ever experienced in sub-Saharan Africa. This is the region that the Commonwealth experts say is in greatest danger; even if these countries were to pursue "ap-propriate adjustment policies" as re-quired by the IMF, they could not hope to meet their debt obligations. The experts urge priority for a set of measures to assist the low-income developing countries, especially in Africa. Such measures include:

 Reactivation of the IMF Trust Fund and an interest subsidy account to help countries that have great diffi-culty in using sbort-term IMF inance at normal interest rates. Recognition that, while appropriate IMF lending is desirable, long-term structural adjustment in low-income countries requires that the World Bank, in conjunction with regional banks, piay a central role.

• A substantial real increase in official development aid, with a larger share for the poorer countries.

Substantial relief, through longer maturities and grace periods, lower interest and rescheduling of the foreign debts of lower-income countries.

Official debt rescheduling procedures to give greater attention to new financial flows. • Improvement of debt management, with international agencies providing technical assistance to develop debt management systems. The annual income of the industrialized countries of the West, including Japan, is about $8,000 billion. The debt of all the developing countries to the banks is about $400 bilbon — a little more than one year's potential growth of the world economy. But, the report adds, "a great deal more than one year's growth of the world economy is at stake." International Herald Tribune.

A Haze Over France I was intrigued by the report "Al-

As an American physician visiting this lovely country for six months, I have not been impressed by alcohol abuse What has impressed me is the incredible number of people who smoke. Everywhere I see men and women smoking, even during meals. Around schools and elsewhere I see more than half of teen-age girls and boys smoking. Yet I have seen nothing in public advertising or on television that voices concern over the harmful effects of this terrible addiction.

Grapes and numerous berries covered the fields. The shoreline was shorter and the island narrower; bays, tidal estuaries and marshes indented its edges. At high tide, water reached across the land, dividing it in two at the level of present-day Canal Street.

Lower Manhattan, with its flat, marshy land, had reminded the Dutch of their homeland and they started making changes from the moment they arrived in the early 1620s. New Amsterdam ended at present-day Wall Street, and most farms and grazing land reached up only to what is now Canal Street. The Dutch tilled the land, plant-through a swamp called Wolfert's Marsh. When they arrived at the river they collected oysters that women in the village would later shuck, stringing the meat on long willow branches to dry in the sun.

Discarded shells accumulated in such abundance that the lake was named after this feature. According to the folklore, the Dutch saw the mounds and named the lake Kalck Hoek (Lime-Shell Point). "Collect" is a corruption of that name.

The town grew quickly. The Dutch spread out on the island and then the British arrived. Planners, developers and local residents leveled the hills. A gridiron plan for streets was superimposed on the surface, choking the streams and ponds. The shoreline was lengthened and straightened. Most of the wildlife and all of the Indians disappeared. All that remains now is the tribe's name.

COCAINE

Deep in the jungle, most often, peasants stamp on coca leaves soaked in water, kerosene and calcium carbo nate. The white paste that seeps out is treated with sulfurle acid, then filtered and dried. After several more steps with more chemicals, it becomes cocaine. About 300 pounds of leavee produce one pound of cocaine.

Murder, Corruption and a Growing Addict Problem Prompt Colombia to Crack Down on Drug Traffickers

By Alan Riding New York Times Service

BOGOTA — After years of disregarding U.S. pressure to cruck down on marijuana and cocaine traffic. Colombia has been prompted to begin a major anti-drug offensive by evidence that narcotics are its problem of well at America's lem as well as America's.

The catalyst for the policy change was the murder April 30 of the country's justice minister, Rodrigo Lara Bonilla, by gummen working for drug traffickers. In addition, it was suddenly acknowledged that drug money had infiltrated politics, the judiciary, the armed forces, news organizations, banking, sports and even the Roman Catholic Church.

Saying "national dignity was held hostage by the traffickers." President Belisario Betancur declared an end to the country's "moral vaca-tions" and ordered the armed forces to take charge of the battle against drugs. And for the first time, he agreed to U.S. requests for aerial spraying of marijuana plantations and for extra-dition of Colombian traffickers wanted in the

Since then, more has been done to disrupt Colombia's narcotics traffic than ever before. Not only have major cocaine and marijuana seizures been made, many cocaine laboratories destroyed and dozens of aircraft confiscated, but leading traffickers who purportedly control 70 percent to 80 percent of cocaine exports have fled the country.

U.S. officials, long frustrated by Colombia's apparent indifference to the problem despite $40 million in American aid over the last decade, are visibly cheered. The U.S. ambassador, Lewis A. Tambs, has said the campaign is going well. Paula Hawkins, Republican of Florida and chairman of the Senate Subcommittee on Alcoholism and Drug Abuse, praised Colombia's great progress in slowing the flow of marijuana and cocaine during a visit to Bogota. The most concrete evidence of this progress has been a doubling in the wholesale price of cocaine since January both in Colombia and in southern Florida, which suggests that less is available. Drug enforcement agents also believe Colombian traffickers have begun to open laboratories and develop new routes elsewhere in

But no one is claiming victory yet. In recent years, as much as 90 percent of the cocaine and 60 percent of the marijuana available in the United States have come from Colombia. This has given the major traffickers wealth far in excess of the resources available to the anti-drug campaign. They also operate out of remote jungle clearings well hidden from security forces

Colombian traffickers still remain involved nt every stage of the cocaine business, from financ-ing coca leaf plantations in Bolivia and Peru and processing coca paste in Colombia to smuggling cocaine into the United States and distributing

N the last decade, Colombia has also become the world's largest supplier of the sedative tablets known by the trade name alude. And recent intelligence indicates that Colombian traffickers have begun experimenting with cultivating the poppics that are used to "They are really a remarkable people when it comes to criminal enterprise," said John T. Cusack, chief of staff for the House Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control. "Whatever they get into, they take it over."

The Betancur government is combining its own offensive with closer cooperation with other countries, not only Bolivia and Peru, the coca teal producers, and the United States, the prin-cipal market, but also Brazil, Venezuela, Ecuador, Panama and Nicaragua, which are used as transit points by traffickers.

The view from here is that new anti-drug offensives in Bolivia and Peru are at least partly inspired by the Colombian moves. And in all three countries there appears to be a new willingness to recognize that tough measures must be taken at the source to protect their own societies and to dismantle the narcotics net-

In Colombia, there was widespread perception that narcotics was entirely an American problem, a function of the seemingly insatiable demand for marijuana and cocaine in the United States. Further, in a country with a tong tradition of smuggling everything from emer-alds to counterfeit dollars, many Colombians almost took pride in the talents of people who could control such a lucrative business.

The Colombian operators first saw a market opportunity in the mid-1970s, when tighter enforcement measures combined with spraying of the herbicide paraquat slowed the flow of Mexican marijuana to the United States. Marijuana from plantations in northern Colombia soon began moving in unprecedented amounts by boat and air into the United States.

in 1978, following complaints from Washington, the Colombian Army was ordered to clamp down on the marijuana traffic. Within two years, the army withdrew from the program and was replaced by a new anti-drug force. Officials said the change occurred because the military command was alarmed by the corruption being spawned among its officers.

By then, however, the marijuana traffic was already being overshadowed by the wealth, di-mension and sophistication of the cocaine operation. Marijuana involved planting, harvesting and bulk marketing, a fairly labor-intensive process. Cocaine required fewer people and more capital, an industrial process using imported chemicals and financial skills to handle the much larger profits.

Cocaine brought the narcotics problem into Colombia's cities. Santa Marta in northern Colombia bad boomed because of marijuana earnings. But cocaine money made itself felt in larger, more influential centers, notably Medellin. Barranquilla. Cali and, less directly, Bogota. And by 1983, it had begun to change the entire face of Colombian society.

HE major traffickers — "los grandes maflosos," as they are known — began by investing in the airplanes, helicopters, boats and vehicles needed to improve business, as well as in flashy imported cars, luxurious stations and newspapers.

Pablo Escobar Gaviria, perhaps Colombia's wealthiest and most infamous trafficker, who now faces drug charges in the United States, began an urban improvement program called Medellin Without Shuns, which was administered by a Roman Catholic priest.

At the same time, the traffickers began shielding themselves with political influence. Before the 1982 election, rumors circulated that traffickers had contributed to the campaigns of candidates of the two main parties, though the charges were never fully investigated. Mr. Escobar was elected an alternate deputy for his home state of Antioquia and thereby obtained parliamentary immunity.

In 1983, the political involvement of the cocaine barons became even more blatant. After Colombia's Supreme Court recommended the extradition of two traffickers wanted in the United States for taundering cocaine earnings through Miami banks, the drug rings financed n publicity campaign against the 1982 extradition treaty with the United States.
One well-known trafficker, Carlos Lender Rias, who is also wanted in the United States, founded a newspaper and formed his own political party to influence public opinion against the treaty. Finally, Mr. Betancur announced that he would not sign the extradition order for the two traffickers, Emiro de Jesús Mejia Romero and Lucas Gómez van Grieken, who were then re-

Last fall, however, Mr. Betancur named Mr. Lara, 38, a lawyer, to head the Justice Ministry, which is responsible for the light against the drug traffic. Soon U.S. officials in Bogotá became impressed by his determination to con-front the traffickers.

Last March, Colombian policemen necompanied by agents from the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration confiscated 27,500 pounds (12,150 kilograms) of cocaine stored near jungle laboratories in Caqueta province. With a street value estimated by U.S. officials at $1.2 billion. it was the largest cocaine seizure on record and was celebrated in Washington as n major break-

For Mr. Lara, however, it meant a wave of death threats. He stepped up security measures and reportedly asked to be transferred to a diplomatic post abroad. But on the evening of April 30, a gunman riding on the back seat of a motorcyle pumped 22 bullets into his Mercedes-Benz, killing him.

The murder seemed to awaken Colombians to what was bappening to their country. The government denied charges that Mr. Lara had been left alone to fight the traffickers and Mr. Betancur declared a war "without armistice" against drugs. He decreed a state of siege that led quickly to a wave of arrests, confiscation of property and destruction of laboratories, all of which reinforced the impression that the authorities had long had the information, but lacked the decision, to strike.

Mr. Betanneur also reversed his decision not to apply the extradition treaty, noting that he would hand over criminals wanted in other countries so that they may be punished as an

In a section of the document called "Suggestion," the traffickers proposed that the extradi-tion treaty with the United States be revised and not be applied retroactively after its revision and that "persecution" of their family members cease. They also asked the president, "if it is considered convenient, to inform the government of the United States of our unconditional plan of surrender."

The attorney general reportedly delivered a note explaining the offer to Alexander Watson, then charge d'affaires at the U.S. Embassy. Its contents were cabled to Washington and a reply followed stating that the United States had no interest in dealing with criminals.

A Return Visit to Bombay With Zubin Mehta

By William Claiborne

Washington Past Service BOMBAY — Zobio Mehta practically bounded into the back seat of a black Mercedes, wishing that all 130 members of his New York Philharmonic could taste and feel the city as he did.

"Look at that!" he said, waving vaguely toward ramshackle stalls elling thick, sweet tea and flat bread chapattis. "I'm sorry my orchestra can't live off the streets and eat off the streets. Our tours are too prophylactic. My musicians are brushing their teeth with mineral

"Look at that!" he said, motioning toward the pathetic tar-paper juggies in which tens of thousands of Bombay's impoverished pave-ment dwellers are born, live and die and leave new generations behind.
"This you don't have in America."

Like most Indian Parsis, or Zoroastrians whose ancestry originated in Persia, Mehta never lived in a Juggie. He went to private school, played cricket, was taught violin and piano and, at age 16, conducted a full rehearsal of the Westernfather founded here. Bot he has an affinity for the crowded, vibrant Bombay he left behind 30 years ago to study music in Vienna. Bombay's population has quadrupled since then and it has begun to rival

"I used to live in this lovely town of 2 million people, bot nobody keeps it up any more. Look at that building. See how elegant it is? Next year it will be black and dirty. Why don't they keep it mp? Look at this. It's like Mexico," he complained in his characteristic rapidfire conversation.

At the end of a six-week, 13-city tour of Asia, Mehta has brought an orchestra to his native Bombay for the first time since 1967, when be toured with the Los Angeles Philharmonic. Mehta and the orchestra

Dining Out

3,000 Bombay concertgoers Sunday night at the Shanmulvhan-anda Hall, where the program opened with the Indian and U.S. national anthems. Substituting Dvorak's New World Symphony for the scheduled Beethoven's Concerto No. 3 for piano and orchestra (because the concert piano was out of time), the Philharmonic played two encores after thunderoos standing ovations.

It has been a triumphant tour for Mehta, who in an admittedly petu-lant outburst in 1977 proclaimed that he would never tour in India again. In 1977 he was snubbed by the prime minister, Morani Desai, for his association with the Israel Philharmonic Orchestra.

"I can't make them [the New York Philharmonic musicians] responsible for my temporary outburst. I can only tell you I'm very happy to be back," Mehta said.

Judging from the sold-out con-certs he has conducted in New Delhi, Calcutta and Bombay, Indian music lovers are glad, too. Upon arriving at the stately Taj Mahal Hotel oo Saturday - in a two-tone beige Rolls-Royce — Mehta was greeted by one of the discordant brass bands that traditionally play at Indian weddings; it knocked out a tinny rendition of "Clementine" underneath a buge banner pro-claiming, "Bombay's Nankhatai Bank Welcomes Zubin and His Band." Billboards all over the city cele-brate the arrival of "our Zubin," and large crowds have turned out to greet him at public appearances, including many of the 90,000 Parsis who remain in the dwindling Zoroastrian communities here. Mehta's father, Mehli, who at 75 still conducts a youth symphony in Los Angeles and is active in other concert projects, founded the Bounbay Symphony in the 1930s after listening to musicians from Italian operatic companies who stopped

D. H. Lawrence Novel Gets Mixed Reviews; Sales Good

By Marcus Eliason

Associated Press TONDON - A long-lost semi-D. H. Lawrence has emerged from its time warp to a mixed reception from the critics, but the publisher says it is selling well. The hostile reviews call "Mr. Noon" mediocre, overwritten and boring. But others have hailed its appearance, not only for its literary value but for the bight it casts on the author's life and sexual attitudes. hitherto portrayed in such classics as "Sons and Lovers" and "Lady Chatterley's Lover."

The novelist Anthony Burgess called "Mr. Noon" "something very like a major novel and one of immense autobiographical inter-est," while the weekly Listener welcomed it for filling in a major gap in Lawrence's development as a man and a writer. "Mr. Noon" was completed in 1921 but was never published. Al-though tame by today's standards, it is believed that it was too sexually explicit for its time. In 1972 the manuscript was acquired by the Humanities Research Center at the University of Texas in Austin. It was published last week by Cambridge University Press. The first part, 93 of the 292 pages was published in 1934 and describes the sexual adventures of a young man growing up in provincial England The second part, only now published, chronicles the experiences of the Lawrence-like Gilbert Noon of boredom, although this is not in Europe, focusing on his elopement with the wife of an English professor, Noon's elopement is believed to be a thinly disguised account of Lawrence's romance with Frieda von Richthofen-Weekley, whom he lured away from her English husband in 1912 and wed, a marriage that lasted until his death in 1930. James Fenton of The Times found Noon's implied boasts of sexual prowess tiresome and wrote that by the climax of the book "it has been going round in circles for some time." He cited passages of writing that be thought were "blatherings." INTERNATIONAL

For a start there's Maria Bjornsoo's set, which consists largely of four immense staircases and a lot of chandeliers, so you start off ex-pecting highlights from "Der Rosenkavalier" and a lot of carousing Viennese singers to have gathered at court.

Instead we get a Clandius (Brian Blessed) straight out of Lyceum melodrama, a Gertrude (Virginia McKenna) who drinks the poi-soned chalice as though she knows her husband is trying to kill Ham-let, which would make for a much more interesting play if only somebody had written it, and a ghost of Hamlet's father (Richard Easton) giving far and away the best and most credible performance of the contine evening.

Something seems to have gone astray here, quite apart from a set that also consists of a lot of doors on lifts, so that you feel you're at a period office furniture exhibition. "Hamlet" has to be more than a series of set pieces. A romantic, ungimmicky canter through the text still needs some internal energy, and Rees's manic wide-eyed sleepwalker lunging through the plot is at best only adequate and at worst unable to save a shaky eve-

But RSC productions have a habit of improving vastly on the slow journey from Warwickshire via Newcastle to London, and Howard Davies's "Henry VIII," which has just reached the Barbican from last season at Stratford gains considerably from the intelligence of its new Wolsey (Stephen Moore), who does the "farewell to all my greatness" as wonderfully as you will ever bear it. Richard Griffiths is, however still a lightweight king, and the three-and-a-half-hour evening still consists of a lot of overlong farewell scenes written by an assortment of dramatists (Shakespeare and Webster for a start) of varying styles. David Schofield's Buckingham has grown in pop-star appeal of the first half, while Gen Jones as a fine, tragic Katharine runs most of the second. We have lost Richard O'Callaghan's intriguing, treacherous Cran-mer, but Oliver Ford-Davies is still to superlative form as the local sycophant, forever clambering out of sinking political ships just too late not to get wet. But the ghastly last act sycophancy of the tribute to the young Queen Elizabeth still plays uncertainly, and that irrelevant and understandably embarrassed modern-dress hand still seems to have wandered in from a nearby folk festival. Better overall, but still oot really good enough as a production to retrieve an always troubled play.

NEW YORK — Prices on the New York Stock Exchange, reflecting Wall Street's uncertainty about the economy and interest rates, suffered a sharp loss Tuesday when late rally attempts fizzled and investors cashed in on recent profits.

Analysts said the stock market remained concerned about the possible impact of a prolonged strike at General Motors Corp.

GM, whose stock was unchanged at 76%, returned to the bargaining table with the auto workers. Among the other autos, Ford abed % to 45% and Chryster 1% to 30%.

Declines led advances, 854-681, as volume swelled to 107.760,000 shares, from 88,790,000 shares Monday.

U.S. Companies Reassess Incentives for Expatriates

By SHERRY BUCHANAN International Herald Tribune

RUSSELS — "I feel like a lightning rod," says a New York-based personnel administration rod," says a New York-based personnel administrator in charge of his company's expatriates. You can't win when you send them abroad and you can't wio when you bring them

A familiar problem for any U.S. multinational company is making a deal sweet enough to get an executive to go abroad without making it so sweet that he would not return home. Expatriates have always been treated differently from their wonder whether the

expatriate deserves all colleagues back home by U.S. companies. Typically, a company offers the expatriate a housing allowance, a cost-of-living adjustment and a tax equaliza-Many U.S. companies

But with the dollar at record highs against most European currencies, people at the home base hear such tales of executhis extra attention. tives eating every day at Le Grand Vérour or L'Arcbestrate in Paris, of fledgling young executives living in gothic mansions in rent-cheap Brussels or of Hush-Puppy wearers buying up Church's shoes and Turnbull and Asser shirts in London at about half the price they are in New York.

Many U.S. multinationals with generous expatriate packages are reassessing these policies, wondering whether the expatriate descripts this deserves this extra attention. Other companies that provide skimpler benefits are asking themselves whether they should increase their packages for expatriates to keep up with the competition and attract the good people they occd.

U.S. expatriates in Europe are by no means equal. What visible cxpat specials you get depends for whom you work.

There is the bard-nose corporate approach of IBM and Hewlett-Packard. These companies do not believe that expatriates need a special deal on top of housing and cost-of-living allowances. The special deal is the mobility allowance — the most visible benefit an expatriate can experient. visible benefit an expatriate can receive. It is also an expensive exercise for the company. On average the premium is equal to 15 percent of an executive's annual base salary. For example, an executive who is earning $80,000 a year will get an additional $12,000 annually. But it is really costing the company between $20,000 and $24,000 after paying the executive's additional taxes. "It is an aberration to pay a premium to an expatriate that is coming to live in a prime location like Geneva," says Christian Gauthier, who responsable for European recruitment at Hewlett-Packard in Geneva. "It doesn't make any economic sense and is completely irrational. It can even have a negative and perverse effect because a guy from New Jersey, for instance, will not have the incentive to go back."

But even hard-nosed companies consider Iraq (viewed as the most dangerous posting), the rest of the Middle East, Nigeria and parts of Asia as hardship posts and pay their executives up to an additional 40 percent of their annual base

There are in-between companies such as Dow Jones that give their expatriates just enough of a financial push to get them on the plane — a one-shot relocation allowance intended to cover the cost of new appliances.

But most U.S. companies as well as the major U.S. banks still operate under the assumption that the expatriate is worthy of special attention. "If our expats didn't get the 15-percent location premium, I am convinced they wouldn't move," says Annette Martin, supervisor of personnel administration Europe for Honeywell in Brussels. "The loss of the spouse's second income is becoming more and more of a problem."

General Electric, after reassessing its expatriate policy, has decided against cutting down on the expatriate premium, which currently averages about 15 percent.

The premium really acts as a psychological bait. It is difficult to generalize that expatriates with the premium system get a better deal than expatriates without it.

Says William Ferguson, GE's manager for employee relations for Europe, the Middle East and Africa: "Companies that aren't paying a premium to their expats may be offering other benefits like higher salaries and company cars."

UAW Says GM Given New Offer

6,000 Are Idled After Walkouts

Compiled by Our Staff From Disputches DETROIT - The United Auto Workers' president, Owen Bieber, said Tuesday that the union gave General Motors Corp. a formal counteroffer on wages that be hopes will permit occupations to be wrapped up quickly on a new contract.

Mr. Bieber said the counteroffer also covers some job security issues, while the UAW is said that dent. Donald Ephlin, said that many of the issues related to job security have been resolved.

The counteroffer came as General Motors laid off 1,000 more workers because of walkouts at 12 of its most profitable facilities. It brought the number laid off to

One analyst said the walkout was costing GM $27 million a day, and the UAW said its members were losing $6 million a day in wages. Mr. Bieber said that if the negotiations were not concluded Tuesday or Wednesday, the union would have to reassess its posidon. He said GM is considering the UAW's proposal but be did not say when it would reply. "There have been some advances made," be said, adding, "There are still some sticking points on job security and economics."

. More than 62,000 UAW members remained on strike Tuesday at GM facilities over local disputes not covered by the national contract, and the walkouts were disrupting operations at the factories that supply the struck plants.

Officials at GM's Chevrolet Pontiac Canada body parts plant in Marion, Indiana, said they were furloughing 523 workers Tuesday. About 200 workers at a Chevrolet Truck and Bus Plant in Indianapohis and more than 300 at GM's Inland Dayton Division in Dayton, Ohio, were told not to report for work, company officials said.

"I think there are going to be a lot of ripple effects. To prevent parts backup, they'll have to shut down a lot of plants," said David Healy, an analyst for Drexel Burnham Lambert in New York (Reiders, AP)

U.S. Imports Help Japan To Recover

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches TOKYO — Japan's economy, helped by brisk exports and a rapidly recovering corporate capital spending, recovered steadily in September, the Economic Planning Agency reported Tuesday.

In its monthly economic review, the agency said that Japanese com-panies, led by manufacturers, are revising capital spending plans up-

The report noted exports rose 12.7 percent by volume in August from a year earlier. Exports to the United States, especially electronic products, accounted for 36.4 perproducts, accounted for 36.4 percent of Japan's total sales overseas. Japan's trade surplus with the United States for the first eight months of 1984 rose to a record $20.218 billion, more than the $18.181-billion surplus for all of 1983, according to the Finance Ministry. (The United States puts the 1983 surplus at $20.7 billion.)

A private U.S.-languese panel

A private U.S. Japanese panel had warned on Monday that the growing trade surplus was causing "an unacceptable level of friction" and damaging bilateral relations. The United States-Japan Advisory Commission, created by Presi-dent Ronald Reagan and Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone, called for Japan's further opening of its market to foreign imports.

But the planning agency said that with the recovery of domestic demand, Japan's imports are increasing rapidly, rising in Angust 22.8 percent by volume from a year earlier level (UPI Renters) earlier level. (UPI, Reuters)

FINDING THE CENTER: Two Narratives

By V. S. Naipaul. 176 pp. $13.95. Knopf, 201 East 50th Street, New York. N.Y. 10022.

MUCH is familiar about V. S. Naipaul's oew work of confiction, "Finding the Center: Two Narratives." His ambivalence toward the Third World that begat him, or what he has referred to variously as the "bush" and "half-made societies"; his early and somewhat absurd ambition to be a writer despite having shown no ability, nor even any understanding of what that ambition involved; his need to travel, because, as be puts it in the foreword to this book, "it became the substitute for the mature social experience — the deepening knowledge of a society — which my background and the nature of my life denied me." These themes have been touched upon or developed frequently in the 16 previous books, half of them fiction, half nonfiction, that have served to establish Naipaul as a modern master of literature.

But as the artistic triumph that it is example of Naipaul's narrative line at its most penetrating and refining — "Finding the Cen-ter" represents a return to form for the author after his sprawling and superficial previous book, "Among the Believers: An Islamic Journey," in which he traveled through Iran, Pakistan, Malaysia and Indonesia and beheld more or less what he would have imagined had he stayed at bome in London. Once again, in this new work, one finds the suppleness of prose, the complexity of structure and the preciseness of imagery that one has come to expect from ading such mature works as his novel "A Bend in the River" and his collection of essays, "The Return of Eva Peron."

But more important, the two thematically linked essays in "Finding the Center" reveal new layers of Narpaul's complex personality. "Center" is the signifying word in the title; to the author it has various meanings: home, himself, the secrets of such cultures as his native Trinidad and the Ivory Coast he visits in the second essay, and, perhaps most signifi-cantly, the heart of his own story, or the narra-tive that would "gather together all the strands of my background - and achieve the particular truth I had in mind." This last he searches for in the opening essay, "Prologue to an Autobiography." He seems to find it in what he at first presents as a joke his father once played on himself when he wrote a story in a Trinidad newspaper about his having to sacrifice a goat to mollify the Hindu goddess Kali. But beneath the joke lies the sad and frightening truth of his father's abortive career as a journalist, a husband and a father. And in that truth lies the meaning of Naipanl's own ambition to be a writer - an ambition he has made such charming fun of earlier in the essay.

One keeps waiting for Naipaul's famous contempt to drip. But it oever seems to, and this is either new for him or he's been previously misunderstood. His disdain, at least in "The Crocodiles of Yamoussoukro," is not for what is primitive about Africa. His score is reserved for those who impose their fantages of the continent. Such people appear in these passing a variety, but they are most vividly symbolized by a group of black women from hands who have come to bring word of Jesus I Ivoirians. As a friend observes to him bring their own psychic sickness to the They should instead come to be com-Africa. They are mad."

For the Africans and their magic world, symbolized to him by the Yamoussoukro, Naipaul seems to have be amounting nearly to awe.

The diamond queen was led, and West took the ace and returned the suit. East could have played a third round to beat the contract, but he did not feel sure that his partner held a third trump. Perhaps he should have reasoned that West would not have taken the downing for a ruff.

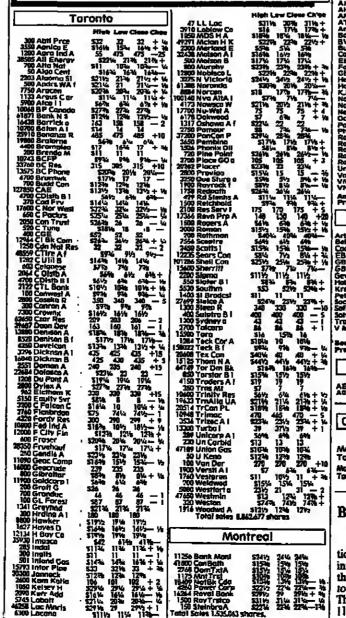

As it was, however, East shifted to spades, and South, put to the final test, hit on a subtle clue. West's decision not to duck in hearts was perhaps because he doubted his

Mondale Needs Vacation

By Russell Baker

N EW YORK — So many polls, so many pundits, so many pundits, so many political oracles have re-elected President Reagan that I was surprised to discover Walter Mondale still cam-

At least he seemed to be campaigning the other night when my television squeezed him in for 45 seconds between a big wind in the Carolinas and a denture adhesive.

I felt sorry for the TV reporter accompanying Mondale. He wore the expression of a man who had spent six hours in a stuck elevator vith a recruiting team of Seventh-Day Adventists.

I guessed from the testy way he spoke of Mondale's futility that the Democratic candidate had severely tested his patience.

The ensuing film of people being beastly to Geraldine Ferraro forced me to discard this hypothesis, for the reporter on this story looked as depressed as the one before.

I felt depressed myself as the Ferraro news unfolded. It showed a crowd of religious people vocally ahusing her, apparently out of a sense of godly obligation. Then it showed a rightist lawyer who, so far as I could make out, wanted her locked up, I didn't catch his reason -you have to be quick to grasp the details on the TV news - but I assume it was because he is a rightwinger and she is a Democratie

The reporter traveling with Geraldine Ferraro had the same irritated expression worn by the man covering Walter Mondale, It was oot directed at the spectacle of massed Christians engaging in un-gentle behavior or at further evidence of the legal profession's de-termination to paralyze the entire

The unhappiness of these reporters, I concluded, arose from the Democratic candidate's ignorance of the polls, pundits and political oracles, all of which and whom had pronounced President Reagan re-

I am in sympathy with these reporters. The Constitution's require-ment that high offices be filled by reporters covering his campaign election made sense when it was would find it harder to snarl when written 200 years ago. Now, thanks to the advanced development of time and money.

Reporters, pundits and political oracles clearly believe this to be the case this year. The incessant issuance of polls showing astonishing public cothusiasm for Reagan overpowers attempts to produce a rational political process and suffuses all reporting and political discussion with a sense of weariness and futility.

Wby, indeed, does Mondale con-tinue to campaign? Since the Constitution prevents Reagan's re-election from being certified before November, most politicians would insist, Mondale must keep campaigning in the hope of passing a

The sensible course for Mondale is to take a long vacation, starting immediately. Since the polls have re-elected Reagan, Mondale is a candidate with nothing to lose. A lengthy vacation might even help him to win, for Reagan's popularity suggests that Americans can be ecstatie with a candidate who is well

I would suggest a vacation in Paris. Four weeks in one of those luxury hotels on the Right Bank. Let it be financed out of Democratic campaign funds, since it can't possibly be a less effective way for winning votes than Mondale's typi-cal campaign travels in the United States. The more he campaigns here, the lower he drops in the

Moreover, since Reagan's popularity shows the voters prefer a can-didate who lives well, Mondale's political strength can be increased by TV film of him idling in his magnificent hotel suite, jetting down to Italy for a weekend touchup on his suntan and entertaining foreign dignitaries at outrageously priced meals in three-star restau-

In late October he might return to let America see how bealthy he looks, tell the latest European jokes and appeal for votes on the ground that he is even more fun than Reagan is. Will it work? Who knows? When you've got nothing to lose. reporting from Maxim's and the

In Court to Give His Views on Sterilization

Washington Post Service ATLANTA — He basked in white-hot TV lights, posed for People and Time, held forth for the networks. White-haired and comhative at 74, his cheeks pink, William B. Shockley was having fun after another day in "I'm enjoying myself. I'm human like everyone else," said the California scientist, perhaps better known for his controversial views that blacks are genetically inferior to whites than for winning the 1956 Nobel Prize in physics. "I like the attention." Flanked by lawyers and armed with reprints of his views, he's got plenty of it in a $1.25-million libel suit against one with a low IQ or a genetically transmitted disease to be steril

The Shockley program was tried out in Germany during World War II, when scientists under the direction of the government experimented on Jews and defectives in an effort to study genetic development," wrote Roger Witherspoon, 35, a black reporter who left the paper in

"To be falsely labeled a 'Nazi' or of approving the Nazi geno-cide during World War II is comBeneath the headline "Designer Genes by Shockley," the article described the professor's racial theories and his VSBP, which he advocates as a way to stop "dysgenics," or backward evolution caused by excessive reproduction among the "genetically disadvan-

Shockley says blacks fall into that category. "One factor that did influence me in getting into this is that the question of race differences is swept under the rug as repugnant," he said.

While contending that he is no racist and punctuating his theo-ries with the phrase "many blacks are superior to many whites," he zeroes in on racial differences, discounting geneticists who shun his forays into their field. For Shockley, hlacks are intellectually inferior and reproducing toward further "misery," as reflected in IQ statistics showing blacks scoring lower than whites.

Shockley is proposing varying bonuses to anyone with an IQ under 100 who agrees to be sterilized upon reaching child-bearing age. He would pay volunteers $1,000 for every IQ point below 100, with "$30,000 put into a trust fund for a 70-IQ moron, potentially capable of producing

70 children According to his calculations, 85 percent of America's hlacks would qualify for the voluntary sterilizatioo program he describes as a "thinking exercise."

Under the plan, bonuses would also go to potential parents deemed by the "best scientific estimates" to have such "genetically carried disabilities as hemophilia, siekle-eell anemia. epilepsy, Huntington's chorea

In his deposition, Shockley said he suffered no damages, but he maintained on the stand that he had "suffered" greatly from the Witherspoon article. He said that it had made him, in effect, media-shy. "I fear the same kind of distor-

But that didn't stop Shockley. He kept speaking out, debating geneticists and sparking furor at Stanford, where he was hanged in effigy before retiring in 1975. At 70, four years ago, he announced that he had volunteered as a donor for the Graham Sperm Bank, which sought Nobel Prize-winners as donors, and high-IQ women as recipients. He gave

He says he wasn't aware at the time that sperm of older men has greater risks for genetic damage, and he describes his three children, one of whom is a Radcliffe graduate, another a physicist, as being genetically inferior. He-hlames his first wife, whose education wasn't up to his.

Shockley fans abound, including a Macon lawyer who drove 90 iles (145 kilometers) to Atlanta just to admire his "courage." A gray-haired lady patted him ou the back after he testified. "You were great," she said.

There were no "Sterilize Shockley" signs, which were evident in the early '70s on the Stanford University campus when Shockley, the inventor of the transistor, lobbied to teach a genetics course and was turned down.

Some testimony has sparked smiles, but Judge Robert L. Vming Jr. was quick to gavel the packed courtroom to order when titters erupt as they did after Ashley Montagu, Princeton professor of anthropology, skewered Shockley for touting that heredity alone determines intelligence.

"Had Mozart been born to a blacksmith, there would never have been a Mozart, just a blacksmith named Mozart," he said.
